

Wednesday, August 22. 2012

narrative practice conversations about gender and culture in the context of trauma

Für kurze Zeit ist auf der website von Wiley ein Artikel von Pennie J. Blackburn mit dem Titel "Creating space for preferred identities: narrative practice conversations about gender and culture in the context of trauma" kostenlos zu laden, der in Heft 1/2010 im Journal of Family Therapy erschienen ist. Im Abstract heißt es: "This paper describes a narrative approach to work with the effects of extreme trauma and forced migration. It describes an approach to work across cultures in cases in which the culturally informed dominant discourses have shaped the effects of the trauma on those that survived them. The paper sets out the stories of two women as exemplars of the complexities of such practice. Examples of the main forms of narrative practice conversations are given and the work is developed through considerations of ways in which therapists can work respectfully between cultures."Zum Volltext geht es hier...

Posted by Tom Levold in Links at 09:26